

Witness for Peace
Sustainable Agriculture
People-to-People Delegation to Cuba
April 17-27, 2013

In 2006, Cuba was designated by the World Wildlife Fund as the only "sustainably developed" country on the planet, noting that if we all followed Cuba's example, we'd only need the resources of one planet to sustain our population indefinitely. 80% of fresh fruit, vegetables, herbs, and medicinal plants are consumed locally by urban residents. What is Cuba doing differently to ensure the long-term health of their land and people?

On this delegation we will learn about Cuba's transition from conventional farming to low-input sustainable agriculture through visiting organic urban gardens, small and large farms, sugar mills, schools, and more. Delegates will meet with urban and rural residents to learn techniques and ideas that can be brought back to the United States and shared with our communities, in order to learn how to create a more sustainable future worldwide.

Cost: The price of this 10-day delegation is $1,550, plus airfare to Havana, Cuba. For flight information, contact the delegation coordinator. The delegation fee covers all set-up, preparation, meals, lodging, interpreters, airfare from Miami to Havana, and ground transportation within Cuba.
