

Race, Gender, and Social Movements in Cuba: October 5th-15th, 2014

This delegation will have the chance to learn about the history of Cuba and its present condition, through the lenses of race and gender. Cuba is home to many vibrant social movements from all sectors of society, and delegates will have the chance to enjoy lots of interesting meetings and workshops with community leaders. This is a great delegation for those who are interested in racial and gender dynamics back in the States!

- Learn how the Cuban Revolution has impacted women and people of color
- Hear about the history of the involvement of marginalized communities in the Revolution and the current government
- Explore the intersections between race, class, and gender in a socialist country
- Enjoy visits to multiple locations in Havana and throughout the countryside
- Document the impact of the U.S. embargo on women, children and Cubans of all classes
- Experience lots of conversations and interactions with ordinary, every-day Cubans!

Cost of the trip is $1,800, plus a $75 visa fee and cost of airfare to Miami (from your home) and to Havana (approximately $450 RT from Miami-Havana). All food, lodging, in-country transportation, interpretation, and pre-delegation materials included.

Application and $150 deposit due August 15th. Remaining balance due September 15th
